

"Somebody Had To Do It"

a children's retrospective on the process of U.S. school desegregation

The Jonathan Jasper Wright Institute at Claflin University, Orangeburg, South Carolina

Overview

A multi-disciplinary study to identify, locate, interview and acknowledge African American "First Children" who desegregated America's schools.

Who were the students who "sacrificed their youth" on the frontline of social change?

How can their stories of courage be relevant to students today facing other kinds of systemic injustice?

Don't let this generation be forgotten. We need your help. To provide information or participate, contact the project's research office housed at historically Black Claflin University. Principal investigator: Dr. Millicent E. Brown.

(Millicent Brown, et. al., v. Charleston School Board District 20, 1963)

Initial funding received from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation and the American Friends Service Committee. We welcome your personal and institutional financial support.

400 Magnolia Street, Orangeburg South Carolina, 29115

Ph 803-535-5688 Fax 803-535-5468

Email: somebody@claflin.edu

Website: <http://somebody.claflin.edu>

